

List of Figures

Figure 1. Karel Reisz: The French Lieutenant's Woman, 1981. A clapperboard appears on the scene.

Figure 2. Karel Reisz: The French Lieutenant's Woman, 1981. A street view of Lyme Regis during the Victorian age.

Figure 3. Karel Reisz: The French Lieutenant's Woman, 1981. Sarah's figure while standing on the Cobb from afar.

Figure 4-5. Karel Reisz: The French Lieutenant's Woman, 1981. Sarah's and Charles' facial expressions when they met for the very first time.

Figure 6-7. Karel Reisz: The French Lieutenant's Woman, 1981. Charles notices Sarah in the forest, presented from a subjective photography.

Figure 8. Karel Reisz: The French Lieutenant's Woman, 1981. The camera zooms in, representing Mike in a theatrical way.

Figure 9. Karel Reisz: The French Lieutenant's Woman, 1981. Charles' reaction when Sarah opens up to him in close-up.

Figure 10-11. Karel Reisz: The French Lieutenant's Woman, 1981. A play with lights, darkness and brightness while Sarah is running in the forest.

Figure 12. Karel Reisz: The French Lieutenant's Woman, 1981. The first scene in which the mirror appears, considered as an example for mise en abyme.

Figure 13-14. Karel Reisz: The French Lieutenant's Woman, 1981. Another scene in which mise en abyme occurs, reflecting the duality of Sarah's character.

Figure 15. Karel Reisz: The French Lieutenant's Woman, 1981. A forthcoming scene where mise en abyme comes up again, Anna standing in front of a mirror, partially looking like Sarah.

Figure 16. Karel Reisz: The French Lieutenant's Woman, 1981. The heartbroken Mike shouts out of the window, the camera zooms in.

