EcoDesign Seminar

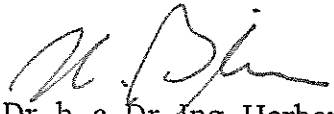

on September 22/23, 2008 in Veszprém

The seminar conveyed basic knowledge and working methods for the design of environmentally sound products. Practical examples from the area of consumer products were used to illustrate the effects of technical products on the environment. Participants applied methods in order to systematically reduce environmental effects. They worked in teams, with concrete example cases. The results were discussed and critically examined together with the other participants and the supervisors.

Learning objectives of the seminar were:

- Basics of designing environmentally sound products
- Life cycle thinking
- Areas of conflict between economy and ecology
- Successful innovation
- Soft skills
