Nowadays, the famous ruin bars in the heart of Budapest are contributing a lot to the tourism of the capital city, but also carry many problems for the locals. The noise load, the crowded streets, the increased crime rate and mostly the deteriorating public purity and security are the worst things in Belső-Erzsébetváros, the so called 'party quarter' of Budapest. Despite these facts, examples from other capital cities show us that these things can be handled very well and there are many ways to decrease or even eliminate the bad effects occurring in the examined area. The goal of my research is to map all of the different interests and stakeholders, because firstly we have to understand the source of the problem to solve it the proper way.
